

Civil Nuclear Police Authority

Appointment of Independent Members

£17,500 a year for circa 35 days per year

The Civil Nuclear Police Authority (CNPA) is the public body responsible for oversight of the Civil Nuclear Constabulary (CNC), which provides a dedicated armed response capability for designated civil nuclear sites and for designated movements of civil nuclear material.

The Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change now seeks to appoint two outstanding individuals as Independent Members of the CNPA from November 2009. Independent Members play a key role in providing scrutiny of the CNC.

You will bring board-level experience in the public or private sector, ideally as a non-executive. A demonstrated ability to challenge as well as build consensus will be important.

You will have experience in either: audit and risk management, or finance, planning and performance management, and are likely to have experience of working with Government or in a regulated industry. For security reasons you must be a UK citizen. The appointment will be for three years in the first instance.
